BOSTON

NO place in the United States excites greater interest in the mind of the student of history than Boston. Its settlement in 1630 antedates any other American city of size. It bore a large share in the early Indian wars, and the grand old stories of the Boston Tea Party, of Paul Revere and his famous ride, of Bunker Hill, have for over a hundred years stirred the patriotism of all Americans. Faneuil Hall and the incidents surrounding this "Cradle of Liberty" have placed upon the nation a debt of gratitude which can never be repaid. Boston is to-day as good an example of patriotism as was the Boston of Revolutionary times.

While other and younger cities have outnumbered her in inhabitants, none have surpassed her in stability, in mercantile integrity, nor in any of the essentials of a healthy permanency. In a word — Boston is SOUND. Whatever she does is well done. Though the census of 1900 gives her inhabitants as 560,000, yet it is probable that within a radius of fifteen miles from the State House there are over a million people. Many thousands of persons daily come from the neighboring towns and cities to transact the day's business in Boston, returning at night. The handling of this enormous traffic has led to the erection of the largest railroad station in the world, — the South Terminal, — and also the building of the best rapid transit system in existence. The subway was a wonderful achievement, and now in connection with elevated railroad and surface lines makes a combination of excellence in street transportation surpassing anything of like character in the world. The recently built tunnel connecting East Boston to the city proper is an achievement long desired and displays engineering skill of high order.

Boston has been for many years the boot and shoe mart of the country, and during the purchasing season buyers come here from every nook and corner of the country.

The Boston Public Library is the largest free library in the world. The building is one of great architectural beauty, and its equipment unsurpassed.

Harvard University, the oldest and largest college in America, the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Boston University and over six hundred general and special schools place this city ahead of all others in the matter of educational institutions. These, together with the Museum of Fine Arts, her musical organizations and her many churches, go far to help Boston maintain her fame for culture and general refinement.
